

“Radical, outrageous, insightful...

The Future of Food in America”

-Kelly Anne Blount, USA TODAY Bestselling Author

“A top-20 best non-fiction book of the past 30 years.”

-Dennis Ray, book review, Rapid River Magazine

Robert Turner is a writer for regional food and lifestyle magazines, an organic farmer, and food politics commentator.

Turner is also the author of Carrots Don't Grow on Trees: Building Sustainable and Resilient Communities (Discovery Books, 2019). After a successful business career in diverse industries and global supply chains, he now dedicates his time to helping people understand the global food web and the final conquest of the earth—our soils. He serves on the board of directors for the nationally recognized Organic Growers School and is an experienced speaker on regenerative agriculture.

ABOUT THE BOOK:

The recent Covid-19 pandemic and then Russian hackers on our oil and meat supply created food shortages and higher prices that revealed the weak links in our global, industrialized food system—a food supply chain that promotes itself as a source of plenty for all but really creates monopolies for wealthy corporations and food insecurity for the rest of us. In Lewis Mumford and the Food Fighters, Robert Turner and his misfit band of rebel food fighters define a values-based and principle-centered approach to food that can restore our health, build stronger relationships, and create a more sustainable and resilient food system for the future.
